Bring Our Truth

Hearings at Last

FRANCIS E. DAVIS

Know the truth. Tell others. Tell them that what we are doing is right. The world will come to know what we are doing. We are building the United States into a nation that will be respected by the world.

Southern leaders must act now. Our government must be effective in preserving the peace. Our task is to build a nation that will be respected by the world.

I am sure that our culture will survive. The United States is a dangerous place.

To the Editor—The use of the Equal Rights Amendment is required before the full consent of the educational system can be achieved.

What People Talk About

More Than Law Required
To the Editor—The use of the Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in education as a public relations weapon against current Communist criticism of the United States is a dangerous device.

In the first place, this welcome decision was long overdue for millions of Americans, not because we want to look well before our world neighbors, but rather because it was right that inequalities be officially removed by our government. Instead of boasting of an overdue accomplishment, we should set about the task of defeating southern resistance and building integrated relationships in both north and south. When we accomplish the goal of integration, we will not have to worry about integrated relationships in both north and south. When we accomplish the goal of integration, we will not have to worry about segregated relationships before the world, in spite of this decision.

Secondly, southern stubbornness may be effective in further airing our soiled linen before the world, in spite of this decision.

Thirdly, it is quite evident that much more than a law or decision is required before the evil effects of racial dualism are erased from our culture. Instead of boasting of an overdue accomplishment, we should set about the task of defeating southern resistance and building integrated relationships in both north and south. When we accomplish the goal of integration, we will not have to worry about what others think about us. They will know the truth.
